Description: A free website for for neurologists, neurology residents, and medical students. Contains thousands of images, hundreds of multiple-choice review questions, dozens of educational videos, several user forums, and a couple of online courses. Created by a neurology resident, it is currently maintained by a neurologist and a neuropathologist, with contributions from people from around the world. FrontalCortex.com is a free resource for neurology education. The target audience is neurology residents and medical students. It features a bank of hundreds of boards-type review questions, all of which contain feedback and references to relevant articles or texts. It also has an image gallery with thousands of images, including EEGs, radiographs, illustrations, and over a thousand unique neuropathology images. Online courses in neuropathology and electrodiagnostic testing have been created on the site, and continue to be refined. These include dozens of educational videos. FrontalCortex.com was created by a neurology resident. That resident is now a neurologist, and the neurology program director at Marshall University, and continues to run the page, with the help of other physicians volunteering their time. All the content contributions are donated by volunteers, and are reviewed by physicians. Financial support for the page comes from advertisements on the page, and the occasional donation. No login is required, unless you want to contribute to the growing bank of educational resources, in which case you can create a free account. : :education, neurology, resident, neuropathology, board review, RITE exam : _
