Description: Community group working towards a common, RDF-based, specification for annotating digital resources. The effort began by trying to reconcile two proposals: the Annotation Ontology (<http://code.google.com/p/annotation-ontology/>) and the Open Annotation Model (<http://www.openannotation.org/spec/beta/>). Initially, editors of these proposals collaborated to devise a common draft specification that addresses requirements and use cases that were identified in the course of their respective efforts. This draft became available for public feedback and experimentation in the second quarter of 2012. The final deliverable is a specification, published under an appropriate open license, that is informed by the existing proposals, the common draft specification, and the community feedback.
