Description: PublicationsList.org exists to let researchers and research organizations maintain a reliable web-based record of their academic output without any fuss. Free for individual use; subscription for additional services and institutional sites. PublicationsList.org was set up to streamline the process of maintaining a professional academic publications list online with an easy to use web front end which any researcher can use to maintain their own, professional looking list of publications, which can be hosted on publicationslist.org, or embedded within a departmental web page. Links to full text preprints, or versions in open access repositories and journal websites can be included. Publicationslist.org now offers solutions for research groups and universities to archive and disseminate their research output. The emphasis on ease of use and intuitive user interaction that appeals so much to individuals provides an effective means for organizations to gather and manage research content without having to worry about user interface design themselves. There is a built in PubMed search interface for finding publications matching your name and selecting and importing the ones you want. All the fields will be fetched automatically from MedLine, including the abstract and keywords where available. In the data entry page there is an area where you can paste an entry from the reference management software and have the form automatically populated. You can also upload a complete bibliography file to add all the papers in one go. The supported formats are: EndNote, Reference Manager, BibTeX, ProCite, US Library of Congress XML (MODS), ISI, with conversions performed by bibutils.
