Description: The Graduate Program in Neuroscience is committed to educating and training outstanding young scientists in the multidisciplinary concepts and contemporary techniques at the heart of modern Neuroscience. Students selected for this program generally have had exceptional undergraduate training in the physical, biological and social sciences. It offers students an outstanding opportunity for graduate training in a rapidly growing joint program of the Graduate School of Rutgers University and the Graduate School of Biomedical Sciences of the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey-Robert Wood Johnson Medical School, both located in Piscataway/New Brunswick, New Jersey. A major goal of the Graduate Program in Neuroscience is to prepare students-in the classroom and in active research laboratories-for careers of independent research in universities, medical schools, governmental facilities and industry.
