Description: This web site is your introduction to the world of Florida Aquaculture. It represents a compilation of information about a division in the Florida Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services-the Division of Aquaculture. The Division plays a key role in the regulation of aquaculture facilities and shellfish processing plants, is responsible for opening/closing of shellfish harvesting waters to protect human health, ensures the continued productivity of oyster reefs through a restoration program and issues leases of submerged state lands for aquaculture. The creation of this division is unprecedented for a state agriculture department. Florida's Division of Aquaculture is one-of-a-kind and serves a unique industry like no other in the United States. Please browse this site and learn more about Florida Aquaculture. I welcome your comments on the topics contained in this web site.
