Description: The UCSD School of Medicine are dedicated to producing future leaders in all areas of medicine. As such, the School promotes the pursuit of dual degrees, either in the Medical School's own graduate degree programs or programs offered in other disciplines in the institution. In addition to the study of medicine, the School of Medicine actively encourages its student body to explore broadly in various scholarly areas related to the biomedical sciences. The goal of this additional training is to produce graduates who will bring fresh, innovative ideas to the research laboratory, the public health sector, the humanities and the social sciences, and the business environment. Students may elect to obtain advanced degrees in the following areas: * Biomedical Sciences * Masters in Bioengineering * Masters in Public Health * Masters in Leadership of Health Care Organizations * Masters of Advanced Studies in Clinical Research * Ph.D. Program in the Humanities and Social Sciences * Independent Ph.D. programs Opportunities for enrollment in research or degree programs outside of UCSD are also available, and students are encouraged to investigate these, if interested. Sponsors: This program is supported by the University of California at San Diego.
