Proper Citation: Association for the Scientific Study of Consciousness (RRID:SCR_007154)

Description: An academic society that promotes rigorous research directed toward understanding the nature, function, and underlying mechanisms of consciousness. The ASSC includes members working in the fields of cognitive science, medicine, neuroscience, philosophy, and other relevant disciplines in the sciences and humanities. The ASSC web site has several main functions:

- * coordinating annual conferences on aspects of the scientific study of consciousness.
- * promotion of other activities in the field (smaller conferences, mailing lists, bibliographic resource, etc).
- * facilitate consciousness research with awards for new investigators.
- * publication of papers relevant to the scientific study of consciousness in the inter-disciplinary journal Psyche.

The ASSC Students community's aim is to foster greater involvement of graduate students within the Association for the Scientific Study of Consciousness (ASSC) and improve ways in which the ASSC serves the needs of its student members. Its primary goal is to promote research and debate about consciousness among new researchers. It organizes activities like the current essay contest, details of which are on the news page. It also manage the student pages of the ASSC website and conduct occasional surveys of the ASSC student members.
